This mold is a shell open on both of its faces and comprising a cylinder the inside of which is lined with sand. This shell is closed by a lower and upper lid which open in order to insert the mold into a molding and casting machine and remove the cast metal article which has been produced in it. These lids are generally split and move in front of the opening by gravity when the mold is moved towards the opening. This approach has a number of drawbacks. Firstly, it necessitates the presence of a relatively long moving path between the mold closing and opening of the mold. The downwardly and outwardly moving lids must pass through a relatively lengthy configuration of the machine in order to return to the position of the upper lid when the mold is closed. The length of this path is a disadvantage when the mold is small, for example when casting relatively small metal articles. The above approach also requires a high power for the machine if the power required for the upward and outward return of the lid to its initial position is to be obtained. It is also known to drive the lower lid by a drive shaft with a cam acting on the lid by a double rack. One drawback of this approach is that it is necessary to use a plurality of pieces which are fastened together so that the door assembly can move. The cost of this assembly is relatively high. Another drawback is that the opening between the two doors may become clogged when some adhesive is present between the two pieces and that some adhesive may also be present on the working surfaces of the doors. Finally, this prior art door assembly, by virtue of the presence of two doors, requires the presence of a hole in the mold shell in the position corresponding to the path of the door assembly. Such a hole complicates the construction of the mold and cannot be used for an article which is used in a casting machine having a mold

Comments Similar to Sail Boats Free Screensaver, another screensaver with a similar theme, based on boats, except this one has no controls. There is no slideshow, and a single boat displays. There is a music component to the screen saver, which you can turn off. However, even with music on, you'll have to wait around 30 minutes for it to load (even if the screensaver is set to turn on after 10 minutes). Any specific reason for its 2 stars rating? It's basically a boat screensaver, with nothing to do besides a slideshow. In fact, the slideshow is disabled. Not even a setting to randomly change what boat appears. I was wondering if anyone else has had success with getting their PC to boot straight into a game when they press the Windows key? I usually have to either open the games control panel and select "run" or "open" or something like that, and even then I need to have a game to be running in the background at the time.
