The basic version of Photoshop Elements is free. The pro version costs $49.95 for a single license or $79.95 for a two-year subscription. If you are a skilled user or professional photographer, you may want to consider purchasing the pro version and paying for all of your fixes and enhancements with one license. Adobe Photoshop Lightroom There are a few different ways to refer to Lightroom. Some photographers call it a "digital darkroom." It can be used on a computer or on a separate tablet device. It focuses more on image editing and basic functionality. Adobe Photoshop Elements has three primary editing tools: Editing Elements has mostly the same features as Photoshop. The main difference is that it does not allow you to change the layer and its mask at the same time. You can edit the whole image, but it is difficult to edit an entire layer. The main image layer is covered by the layer mask and you can edit the layer mask at the same time as the image layer. Basic In the Basic editing tool there are tools similar to those in the Edit section of Photoshop. All the tools in the Basic tool are more similar to Adobe Photoshop than Elements' editing tools. Artistic The Artistic editing tools are similar to those found in Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Photoshop Elements. These tools make it easier to make complex changes to your images. Photoshop Elements has a few features which is not in the similar Adobe Photoshop programs. Versions and Editions Adobe Photoshop Elements offers three different versions: Basic Standard Professional The following is a summary of the three versions and their primary features. Basic Edit files with basic editing tools like the regular filters and tools found in Photoshop. What's New in the?

Family-style dining is one of the country's greatest gastronomic delights. But what happens when you're among a family of seven or eight? That's when the real dining magic starts to happen. At the Valdosta, Georgia, home of the Sons of Hermann, that means picking a side of the table for each family member to make sure they get the exact foods they want. It's a kind of battle royal that involves some serious elbow grease. Each son works together to set up the table—by his or her specialty. And guess what? They all work together too, with no one saying a critical word. The meals are communal, and everyone eats together. And the products they all eat are carefully chosen. In fact, each of the seven sons and his respective wife spend a year traveling to the California cities of Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Diego, and San Jose for three to six months each year to scour hundreds of various fresh ethnic foods from the world's different cultures. Their table is loaded with items from their ethnic heritage, including such things as tongue peppers, goat cheese from the Basques, calabrian olives from Italy, green olives from Turkey, french beans from France, pimento cheese from Jamaica, stuffed peppers from Puerto Rico, and chorizo from Mexico. They've become experts in sourcing and preparing the foods they eat, and even brought out food-mastery demonstrations at the Sons of Hermann contest in 2000. The answer, they claim, is to "eat like a food historian," which for this family simply means they eat according to tradition. What Tradition? In 1999, Michael Stucker, the founder of Sons of Hermann, was named "America's Fattest Chef," thanks to the his nearly 400 pounds of meat. He's also been a judge at the National Barbecue Contest, a National Barbecue Cooking Championship, The James Beard Award, and the World Barbecue Champion Award. The people at Sons of Hermann do not follow any formalized diet. They eat like their ancestors did, according to their tradition. It's a way of life, and a profound one. I'm amazed at the way they eat, in part because it's so different from anything I'd ever seen before.
