Before delving deep into the steps of a masterful book review, this should be clarified that a book review should have three major parts, which include Summary, evaluation, and recommendations. These are inevitable for a book review, as all information and details fall under these three umbrellas. The first step for a book review is to read thoroughly. Reading thoroughly does not mean to write to word or cover to cover. Thorough read means a better understanding of the outline with attentive reading. The basic requirement for a book review is to have ample knowledge of the content. Along with this aspect, it is equally important to write a book review with the best possible effort to maintain objectivity.

After reading, the next step is to give a brief introduction of the author, whose book is being reviewed by you. For instance, the introduction of the author should include his educational and professional background, along with writing experience. If an under-review book is the first publication, then publication experience can be skipped, as this is not a thumb rule.

The next important step is to write the summary of the book. Make sure to avoid delving into too much detail in the book. This part of the book review should not be a spoiler for the rest of the review. In this part of the book review, do not hesitate to take a position and hence do not leave your reader guessing about your stance. There is nothing strange to disagree however the author should not be ridiculed. The subject matter needs to be discussed here in this part. The subject matter can either be from fiction or non-fiction and hence approach may vary. For instance, in non-fiction writing, the review should be plain, simple, and clear. However, for fiction writing, summing up of theme with a bit of focus on the description is desired.

The next part is regarding the evaluation of the work. This is where most part of the book review lies, as it includes all major aspects. Evaluation of the text might discuss the interesting or boring aspect of the book. In the same way, you can discuss whether the story was predictable or unpredictable. Focus can also be on action and literary aspects. Furthermore, errors or discrepancies should be incorporated in this part of the book review. These are the important aspects and hence cannot turn away from addressing them.

The style and language of the author are often discussed as this leaves an impression of a good book review. Either the published work is fictional or non-fiction, proper analysis is required in this part of the book review. This needs to be mentioned that the one who is reviewing the book should have clarity of thought and expression so that the review can create a strong impression. Evaluation is part and parcel of a book review, as the reviewer would evaluate the magnitude of influence. Other than the influence of the text, factors that triggered that book review are equally important to be considered, so that a holistic picture is attained in the book review.

Within the evaluation section of the book review, selective parts of the text should be monitored too. Monitoring in the context of diverting attention to the most important parts of the book, or it may be chapter-wise. As a writer, you have the liberty to decide which part needs to be emphasized and which part should be skipped in the book review. There is no such compulsion for the writer to incorporate every aspect in the book.

In the evaluation section, this is not possible for the writer to stay neutral. Neutrality is not the expectation rather strengths or weaknesses should be highlighted. If this aspect is understood by the students and writers, then they would not have to ask others to write my essay or a book review. Rather than neutrality, objectivity and clarity of thought are the custodians of a successful book review.

In this process of writing a book review, the third and last major step is of conclusion and recommendations. This is equally important like the evaluation step of a book review. The writer has to write with certain limitations. For instance, the writer cannot jot down a sweeping statement. The sweeping statement is never a sign of objective work. Logically proven aspects should be the main focus and this section of the conclusion should be to cap the entire discussion in a coherent manner.

The conclusion should not have additional explanations rather this stage of the book review is to complement your additional stance. Recommendations about the book are narrated in this part of the book review. In case of an unpleasant experience, avoid humiliating the writer, as he/she has put in ample effort to write that piece of writing.
